

Published based on The Damage Done, Part 9 -- Geothermal Is Hot Stuff, but Is It Really Green?

The Damage Done, Part 9 -- Geothermal Is Hot Stuff, but Is It Really Green?

A report from the Geothermal Energy Association (GEA) says, "the heat continuously flowing from the Earth's interior is estimated to be equivalent to 42 million megawatts of power" -- that is, enough to meet the power needs of all the homes on earth more than 100 times over.

The Damage Done, Part 9 -- Geothermal Is Hot Stuff, but Is It Really Green?

You can also find this article published on The Damage Done, Part 9 -- Geothermal Is Hot Stuff, but Is It Really Green?, and on the tag pages Earth, Energy Association, gea, Geothermal Energy, Hot Stuff, megawatts.